Tricolored Blackbird listed as “Threatened”

In a victory for Audubon California and other conservation groups, on Thursday, April 19, the California Fish and Game commission voted 4–0 to list the Tricolored Blackbird as Threatened under the state's Endangered Species Act.

Tricolored Blackbirds live almost entirely in California and once numbered in the millions, but their population has declined to a fraction of what it once was. The latest survey of the birds found only about 178,000 remaining.

The reasons for this decline are many, but the loss of marsh and nearby feeding habitats along the coast and in southern California and the Central Valley is the main issue. With the loss of native habitat, the species has become dependent on agricultural lands, with most of the largest colonies nesting in grain fields. A real dilemma develops because Tricolored young typically have not yet left the nest before the time farmers harvest their crop, and harvesting destroys Tricolored Blackbird nests and young. Thousands of chicks can be lost in a few minutes.

In recent years, Audubon California has partnered with the Natural Resources Conservation Service, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife, and the dairy industry to strike agreements with farmers to delay harvests to allow the young birds to fledge. These agreements with farmers have saved many thousands of Tricolored Blackbirds.

And Tricolored Blackbirds are already making their nests. Four sites have been identified in Merced County, along with two in Tulare County, and one in Kern County. Some of these already have chicks in nests.

The California Department of Fish and Wildlife recommended listing based on its review of the best available science.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S DESK

"Having dealt with family health problems over the past few weeks, what a comfort it is to enjoy nature's spring bounty. As I write, the transition from wintering birds is in full swing: Colorful, tuneful songbird migrants are everywhere.

Thanks to those who are reporting them on our San Joaquin County birdwatching listserv, sjbirds@yahogroups.com, as well as on the international bird-reporting website eBird.org, coordinated by the Cornell University Laboratory of Ornithology and National Audubon. While eBird is more useful as a scientific archive, our sjbirds listserv lets you be more creative and informal. If you like, you can just write a quick line about a sighting – or you can spin a longer tale of your birding adventure. I well remember the posts of the late Cheri Pillsbury, who made me feel I was out there with her, raptor-watching at Flood & Waverly Roads. Sjbirds helps to create a real birding community spirit in our county. I'd love to see more posts, even if just brief comments with links to eBird checklists.

As a historical note, that sort of community spirit thrived at one of the first birding listservs, the mainly-US Birdchat. I've been a member almost since its inception in 1991. Commentary on bird evolution, conservation, birding gear, and much more related to wild birds supplemented trip reports to birding hotspots and bird migration highlights. Traffic on that listserv has been dramatically reduced, with so many more local and state choices plus eBird and Facebook, but some of the same contributors still offer memorable posts. And while I'm on this topic, let me mention your chapter's Facebook page: www.facebook.com/sanjoaquinaudubon/. Take a look, enjoy the field trip photos, and join the conversation!"
